Dear Investors and all our Associates,

Passing of the Depositories Act in August 1996 was a significant milestone in the history of Indian capital market. Clearly, it was a product of the reform process. Though, CDSL was a late entrant, CDSL's contribution in the success of demat trading is no way insignificant and it has demonstratively made the demat system more affordable to investors.

In the past twelve months, CDSL has achieved substantial progress on all fronts be it technical, operational or expansion of its network. Today, CDSL has 167 registered depository participants offering demat at 336 locations in 95 cities. CDSL has the largest number of companies admitted into its system. Number of instruments admitted in the CDSL system exceeds 5300, which includes over 1100 debt instruments like debentures, bonds, mutual fund units, pass through certificates and commercial papers.

If 2001 was a year of consolidation for CDSL, the year 2002 would usher in streamlining of operational and technical systems, introduction of web based online transaction facility and admitting of government securities in the CDSL system.

I am also delighted to inform you that, in its on-going disinvestment programme, the Government of India has once again chosen CDSL for divesting its holding in Videsh Sanchar Nigam Limited.

The recent decision of the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI) to extend rolling settlement to all scrips as well as to shorten the settlement cycle to T+3 (trading date plus three days) will catapult Indian markets into the league of most advanced markets. We, at CDSL, are equipped to handle these changes. With the built in advantages CDSL system offers, I am sure you will transact all your securities trading business through your CDSL account.

The Real Time Gross Show

Contributed by Mr. Vineet Bhatnagar, Managing Director, Refco - Sify Securities India Pvt. Ltd.

Of late, many central banks have created new RTGS systems or improved their existing ones to strengthen their wholesale payment systems and India shall soon be on track too. With RBI announcing that real-time gross settlement (RTGS) is just round the corner, the Indian payment systems are all set to witness a whole new world of sophistication.

Central banks of almost all fully developed countries have encouraged the use of real-time gross settlement payments systems for securities and foreign exchange transactions because of the virtual agreement that gross settlement systems make wholesale payment systems more immune to widespread financial disruption. Fedwire - Federal Reserve's Fedwire Funds Transfer Service, TARGET - Trans European Automated Real-time Gross Settlement Express Transfer System, CHAPS United Kingdom's Clearing House Automated Payment System, BOJ-Net - Bank of Japan's large value funds transfer service are some examples of RTGS systems.

Real-time gross settlement systems are large-value funds transfer services that operate continuously during business hours to provide settlement of payment obligations, which are irrevocable. In words of the Committee on Payment and Settlement Systems of the Central Banks of the G10 countries, "This is a gross settlement system in which both processing and final settlement of funds transfer instructions can take place continuously (i.e. in real time). Transfers are settled individually without netting the debits against credits".

Irrevocable fund transfers on RTGS systems occur when a central bank debits the account of the party paying-in and credits the account of the party receiving the funds. This transfer of value from payer to payee is simultaneous and final. As the funds transfer occurs (at least in principle) at the time the instructions of the payer are transmitted to the central bank, it is said to be in real time.

Says Adil Patrawala, Vice President at a leading brokerage outfit, "With the current setup of money transfers through physical instruments, the essence of the 'real-time' element would be lost. For RTGS to be truly operational, an effective and efficient electronic securities and money transfer mechanism has to be devised first. This implies a massive network in terms of online connectivity of all concerned participants and their respective funds and securities accounts to RBI's systems"

The obvious advantage of such a setup is that RTGS systems carry negligible settlement risk since they provide immediate finality of funds through continuous intra-day final transfers. Participants who require same day payment for their large value transactions will benefit from RTGS since it fulfills this requirement.

But all this comes for a price. Since RTGS systems operate on the basis of considerable liquidity being available within the system, they tend to be costly.

The design and implementation of RTGS systems differ considerably from one country to another. Two important issues along which currently operating RTGS systems differ are (1) policies towards the granting of central bank intra-day credit and (2) the existence and management of cheque / pay-order queues.

Intra-day credit is valuable in an RTGS system because it can reduce payment blockages that may arise. One participant's outgoing payment awaits an incoming payment from another participant, which may, in turn, be waiting on a payment from a third participant. Payments may become blocked in RTGS systems because of the "cover principle" in gross settlement systems: An outgoing payment order is executed if and only if the sending bank currently has sufficient cash balances, or cover, in its funds account at the central bank. This kind of a scenario may lead to the worst case where in no participant can make a payment through an RTGS system because all cash balances held by participants are due to receive payments from others.

Although unlimited central bank intra-day credit (also called daylight overdrafts as these loans are required to be repaid by the end of the day) would eliminate this gridlock, it is not offered in any RTGS systems because such a policy may lead to participants' managing their intra-day liquidity less intensively. Such a situation could give rise to an acute liquidity crisis, into which central banks would need to intervene in their role as lender of last resort. Ample availability of central bank intra-day credit could also hamper the emergence of intra-day money markets, which are, in principle, a necessary component of a complete and efficient set of financial markets. The reason is that participants who need funds to make payments in an RTGS system and don't have access to intra-day central bank credit resort to borrowings in the intra-day money market. Thus the implementation of RTGS in India could also see the birth of a vibrant intra-day money market.

Some RTGS systems do allow participants to send payments for amounts greater than their reserve balances immediately prior to the time of the request. In carrying out such a payment request, the central bank extends a short-term loan (daylight overdraft) to fund the reserve account of the sending bank. Such overdrafts can be made operational in various ways. Among G-10 RTGS systems, daylight overdrafts on Fedwire within a participant's specified limit do not generally require specific collateral backing. This feature is advantageous to participants, which typically do not need to hold or manage significant amounts of reserves or collateral for payment purposes. Another model for central bank extensions of intra-day credit requires a borrowing participant to fully collateralize the overdraft. To be fully effective as a central bank risk-management tool in a real-time payments system, a full-collateralization policy requires that collateral securities be available for real-time pledges, as well.

Despite the fact that all RTGS systems are capable of operating in real-time, some payment orders in some RTGS systems are not carried out immediately. For example, when a sending participant has insufficient funds in its current account and central bank intra-day credit is not available, either temporarily for that bank or as a matter of system design, the payment order will not be executed. A pending payment order is subject to two different responses by central banks.

In one case, the payment order is rejected outright and the sender may enter it into an 'internal queue' that assigns priority to outgoing payments. Selected payment orders are then resubmitted to the RTGS system when sufficient covering funds in the participant's funds account become available, either from payments received or via borrowing from another participant. Alternatively, a payment order that cannot be executed because of insufficient reserve funds may enter a 'centralized queue' maintained by the central bank. That is, rather than returning the payment order unexecuted to the sending institution, the central bank retains all payment orders that require incoming cover centrally.

When adequate reserves become available to execute any of the queued requests, the central bank then reenters the payment order into the system. A centrally located and managed queue can facilitate an orderly flow of payments because the system operator can identify payment requests that will offset each other to some extent. That is, one payment provides cover for the next, which provides cover for the next, and so forth. This type of queue management is termed "optimization" by the Bank for International Settlements. The existence of a centralized queue and optimization routines may, again, discourage intensive management of intra-day liquidity by participants and the practice of systematically anticipating payments that are being held in queues tends to increase systemic inter dependence and settlement risk precisely the problems that RTGS systems are designed to eliminate.

The way Indian policy makers will shape this entire design is going to be interesting to watch. Though it takes time for established settlement practices to change, RTGS is all set to make an impact on the Indian markets.

Trading Strategy for Success

Contributed by Mr. Motilal Oswal, Chairman & Managing Director, Motilal Oswal Securities Limited

There are only two driving emotions in the stock market - Greed and Fear. Greed is a very acceptable emotion and we thrive on it. However, avarice which is irrational greed, is a trader's enemy.

An old saying in the stock market is :- Rule No.1 - Don't loose money, and Rule No.2 - Don't forget Rule No.1.

The first step in trading is to set aside a particular amount for trading. This should be the amount which is not required for immediate needs and should be a small portion of the trader's net worth.

The next is to have a pre-planned trading system. This should be arrived at by testing different systems on data for a number of scrips for a short period. A detailed record should be compiled of the number of trades, successes, failures, capital invested, gains and losses after brokerage. This strategy should be tested across scrips and should be scrip independent. Build into this strategy, a profit booking rule. More importantly, have a stop loss strategy. However confident one may be, some trades are going to turn sour. Ensure that your system gives you the right risk-reward ratio which is favorable. Once you have planned you play, play your plan.

Traders often make simple mistakes which can be costly, Never jump into a trade if you are late in catching the opportunity. As they say, better safe than sorry. Another common mistake is to forget the system and get into what some bull is reportedly buying or selling. Yet another is to get into any junk stock because it belongs to a sector that is currently hot. Others are compulsive traders and get into positions even though their system is not generating any buying or selling signals.

Successful trading is simple; it lies in doing simple things well, taking profits and cutting losses to a plan.
