The easiest facility will be inaugurated by Shri G N Bajpai, Chairman, SEBI. easiest will establish a common platform for BOs for issuance of delivery instructions through the internet. The "easiest" facility will provide an anytime anywhere kind of freedom to investors to issue delivery instructions. Besides enabling them to meet the strict deadlines of delivery set under the T+2 regime, it will also obviate the need of their visiting DP offices to give debit instructions.

How to write your CDSL demat account number in public issue forms :

While subscribing to a Public Issue (IPO), an accountholder is required to mention his demat account number in the IPO application form, if he desires to obtain credit of allotted securities in the dematerialised form. It is observed that in some cases, the IPO application form contains a 16-block format for filling in the CDSL demat account number. However, in case of some others, separate blocks are provided in the application form for giving details of DP-Id and Client-Id, thereby creating some confusion in the minds of the investor.

While mentioning the CDSL demat account number in the IPO application forms (in cases where separate blocks for giving details of DP-Id and client IDs are provided), the demat account number can be written in the following manner:

DP ID	<First 8 digits of the 16 digit BO ID>
Client ID	<Next 8 digits of the 16 digit BO ID>

E.g. If the demat account number is 13025800 00001234, the same can be written in the following manner on the IPO application form—

DP ID	13025800
Client ID	00001234

Withdrawal of Transfer-Cum-Demat Scheme

SEBI has vide its circular ref. no. SEBI/MRD/Cir-10/2004 dated February 10, 2004 informed that the facility of transfer-cum-demat is withdrawn with immediate effect. Investors/Issuers/RTAs are requested to take note of the same and not to send any transfer cum demat option letters to DPs.

Moreover, all the facilities and benefits of easi are automatically available to a subscriber of easiest.
